Note:

⁷ 'Coelum est id quod omnia, quae sunt, praeter seipsum complectitur', Petavius, (1630, p. 261), the universe is that what all things, except itself containing, are.

⁸ 'Terra erat [in]anis [...] inuisibilis [et] in[]fr[acta] co[m]posita [...] abyssum vocat', Schedel (1493, fo. 11r), the earth was void, that is [...] invisible and unjoined [...] called Abyss.

⁹ 'Mvndus est compages ex caelo, terrâq; & iis naturis coagmentata quæ vtriusque continetur', Petavius, (1630, p. 261), the world is a structure of heaven and earth, connected by the natures contained in both.

¹² 'Æther est tenuissima substantiæ diffusio [...] ac primigenia lux, neque ab altera participata', Petavius, (1630, p. 261), Ether is the thinnest substance diffusion [...] the original light, which is independent.

¹³ 'vnde [et] aues sub firmamento celi ab eo volantes introducuntur', from which birds originate, being introduced by the firmament of the heaven in flight.

¹⁵ 'Et sp[irit]us[us] d[omi]ni ferebat[ur] sup[er] aquas', Genesis 1:1-2, c.f. Jiménez de Cisneros (1517, fo. ar).

¹⁷ 'Aër est substantia levis, & caliginosa, quæ [...] lumen ex æthere compactum', Petavius (1630, p. 261), Air is the lightweight and misty substance, which [...] condenses luminosity from the Ether.

¹⁹ 'Ros est humor puriori alaplus ex æthere, ex tenui materia consistens', (1630, p. 261), Dew is pure moisture falling out from the ether, which consists of thin matter.

²⁰ 'quib[us] ip[s]a sup[er]ior mundi plar[s] ornatur[ur]', with which the upper part of the world itself is adorned.

²² 'Ornatus sup[er]iorib[us] mundi plar[ib]us', after the upper parts of the world had been decorated.

²³ '[...] virtutes sunt medius ordo hierarchie secu[n]de', the Virtues form the middle order of the second hierarchy.
